A COLLEGE ON A HILL

In 1925 Bishop Cantwell, during the graduation at St. Mary's Academy, pointed out the need for a college for the women of Los Angeles. He asked the Sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet to construct an institution of higher education comparable to the quality education given by the Sisters at St. Mary's. By 1929 the Sisters had transformed a dream into reality; thirty-six acres of mountain area in Brentwood was purchased and construction began.

"A college on a hill. Education lifted to heights where natural environment enforces its spiritual and intellectual values. There is so much of propriety in the idea that one wonders why learning did not always abide on the higher places instead of on the low. Of old, holiness sought the mountains for prayer, today eager youth mounts upward to learn."

Edward F. O'Day Commentary on the order of the Sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet (1929).

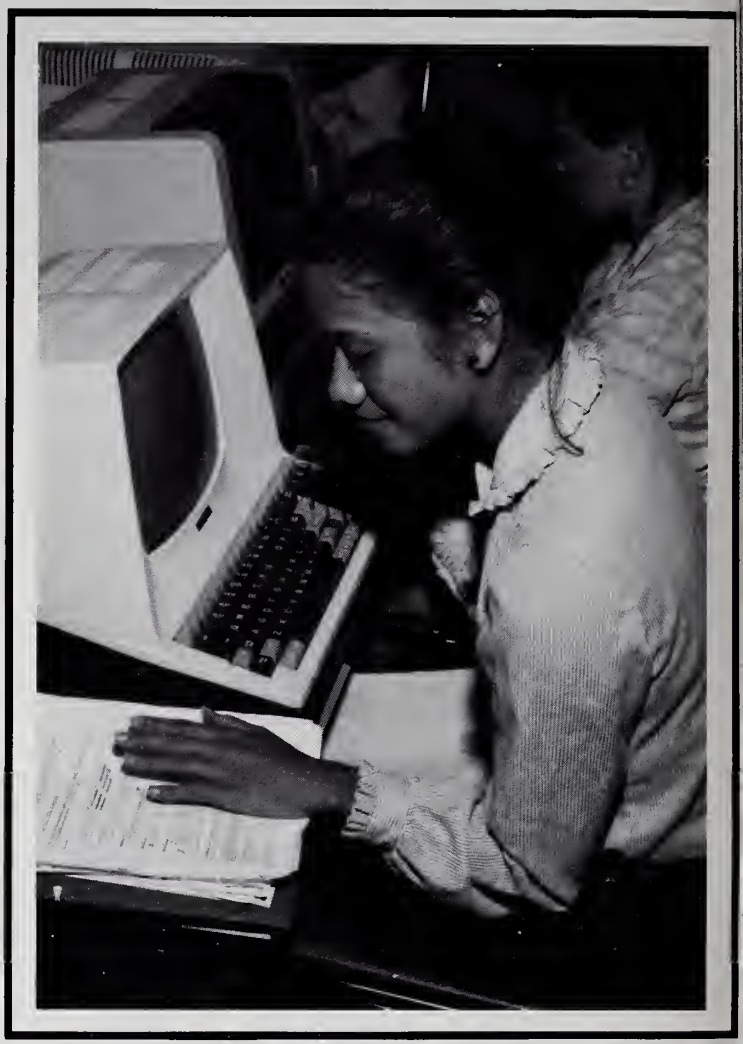
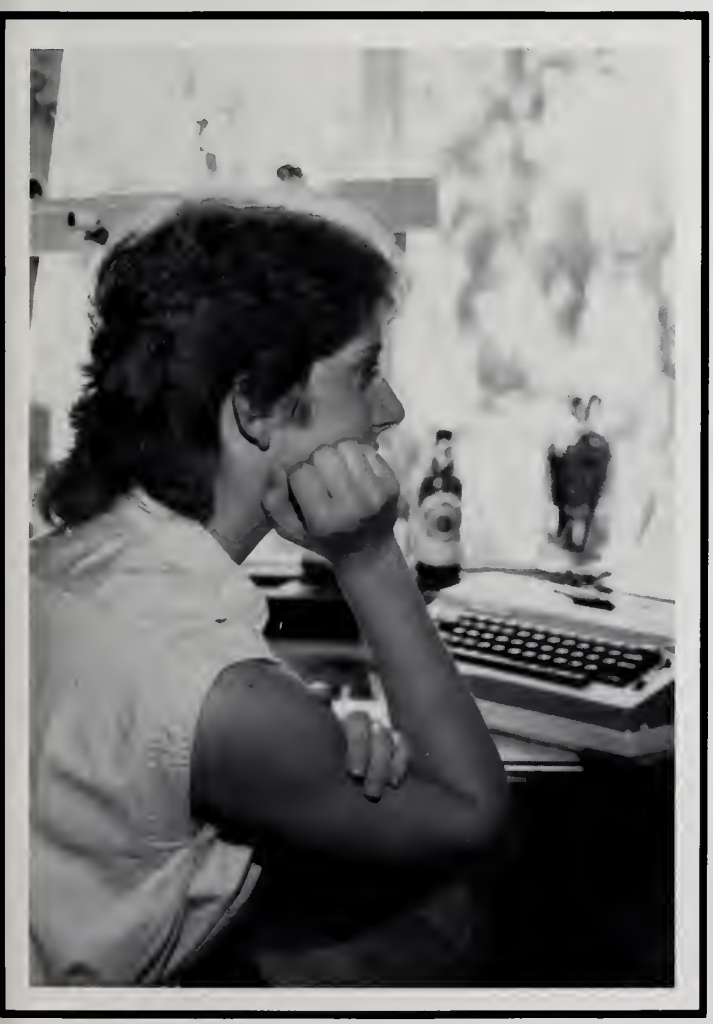
Today, in 1984, at the center of this college a statue of Mary, a woman of vision and knowledge, watches over her namesake, guiding the women of the college. Her outstretched arms symbolize her openness to the women before her and encourage them to accept her guidance. Mary's open hands offer silent support to all of those who open themselves to it.





A TOWER: HOLINESS

A symbol of God's love and concern, the tower of Mary's Chapel conveys a sense of direction both in faith and in education. Rising tall at the top of the hill, it visibly guides the eye heavenward, a constant reminder of God's presence. The height of the tower gives direction to education as it shoots skyward, encouraging students to set progressively higher goals, striving for limitless knowledge.

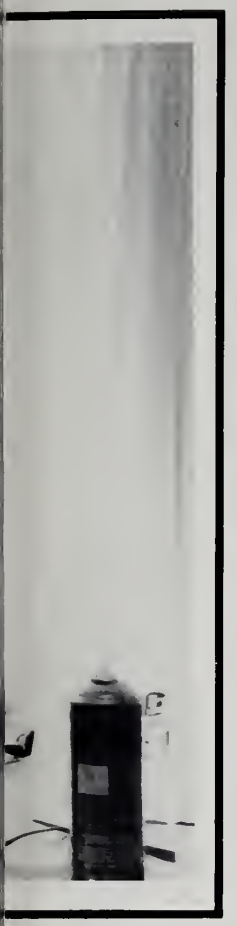
A TOWER: STRENGTH

Strong and enduring, the tower of Mary's Chapel dominates the physical campus, encouraging students to dominate campus activities, inspiring persistence throughout all facets of education. In the same way that the tower stands beside the chapel for support, the women of the Mount receive support throughout their lives from their educational and religious experiences at Mount St. Mary's. Looking through the arches, the structures move into the distance, becoming a background rather than a focal point. Similarly, the institutions of education will stand in the background as the students' focus shifts from the academic to the practical.



OPEN

A TOWER: FAITH

As the students, the graduates, move into the future, using what they have received at Mount St. Mary's, the image of the tower remains. Revealing the past, suggesting the future, the symbol of faith stands focused and rooted, lending stability to future endeavors. The faith that the tower inspires is long-lasting. It has been present throughout the past years as a positive self-image, setting short-range goals and reaching them. Now it becomes much more; it is the effort necessary to attain long-range goals. This faith is self-esteem, self-assurance, and self-confidence. Not just a dependence on what has been learned, but confidence in a personal ability to use that knowledge to give the future direction. The tower, that faith, will always be there.
